The Cathedral of St. Gudule is a magnificent building of Gothic architecture. The first church of St. Gudule was erected early in the eleventh century, and stood on the spot now occupied by the nave. The present building dates back from the thirteenth century, and suffered at the hands of the Reformers during the religious troubles of the sixteenth century. It was closed for two years—from 1798 to 1800—and a proposal was made to pull it down to make way for a theatre.
